Some increase would normally be expected toward the east of winter, but this year the gain was more than usual. The output of the iron and steel industry, is a time-proven index of country-wide production, has likewise been increasing very ingidly during the past few months. However, it is not at all certain that the improvement in carloadings and iron production has not been brought about through the desire to prepare for possible changes in the situation as the effects of the coal strike become felt. This fatter in itself, while it may not be meuncing immediately following April 1, if pro-fracted for any considerable length of time has notential possibilities which are not apt to improve business sentiment. There have been some significant changes in the industrial situation during the past few, weeks—new trends whilch, if continued, may mean a considerable slowing down of business activity, in New England at least, writes Frederick H. Cuirties, chairman and federal reserve hank of Boston in his monthly review. The leading industries of this district are cotton and woolen textiles and boots and shoes, and they are not in as good a potential.

of production in the factories of this district:

The rate of manufacturing activity in New England reached its highest soint in January 1920, and declined gractically throughout that year while during 1921 it was again on an almost constant upgrade. It is significant that the decline started in New England several months before it did in most parts of the country, and conversely that it started upward in this district several months in advance. That is chiefly because the two largest industries in New England, tertiles, and shoes and leather products, felt the oncoming degression before the majority of industries, and, on the other hand, increased activity before the others.

Discretion must be used in interpreting this index of manufacturing activity. Its primary purpose is to industrie the trend from month te month, rather than to show that production during Promary for Instance, was equal to that in October, 1921. Furthermore, it should not be assumed that it is perfect, although it is believed to be as accourage as the manufacturing statistics now available will perwith. It is a practical ver simple varietics.

facturing statistics now available will permit. It is a practical yet simple yardsilch for measuring approximately New England manufacturing conditions.

For those interested in the methods used in its construction, it may be said that it was first tracessary to asserting the rate of manufacturing activity in the leading New England industries. This was determined either from actual production statistics or from inachinese activity, raw material consumption and employment data. Production and consumption statistics were calculated on a working day basis, because it in, of course, obvious that the total output of an industry would be considerably less in Februing day basis, because it is, of course, obvious that the tetal output of an industry would as equisiderably less in February and it was desired to determine merely the rate of production. Furthermore, no attempt has been made to eliminate those changes in the rate of production. Furthermore, no attempt has been made to eliminate those changes in the rate of production which are duscoled to the different seasons of the year, because it is felt that the seasons of the year, because it is felt that the seasons is changes are very important, and must be reckloned with. Neither has it been deemed necessary to allow for normal growth of the manufacturing output of the district. This naturally would be comparatively small from year to year and the purpose of this particularly index is merely to show the general trend from month to month. After the manufacturing rates for each of the several industries had been calculated, it was necessary to combinate them into one single index number. This was not done by simply averaging all of the rates, but by what is called the "weightings" process; that is more importance was assigned to some industries than to others. For instance, the textile indextry is the largest in New Empland, and therefore has been given more importance—or weight—than any other. The weightings assigned are based on the relative "value added during manufactur—in each industry, as shown by the 1916 census.

SUNDAY MORNING TALK

PRAYER

Jesus gave many teachings regarding prayer. The Lord's Prayer gathers these teachings together into an example in a few great sentences. This prayer seems to us very simple and easy, but like all our Lord's words, its petitions are wide and deep, each one carrying an ocean of meaning.

The Lord's Prayer teaches us that we all need to pray. Not to pray is to cut ourself off altogether from God the source of all good, of all blessing, of all life. No doubt there are men who do not pray and who yet seem to live on and to receive mercies and blessings from God. He does not cut them off from his love though they pay Him no honor, recognize Him not pay Him no honor, recognize Him not as their Father. This tells us how gracious God is. "He maketh His sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sendeth rain on the just and the un-

IN THE PUBLIC EYE

John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, has been the head of that organisation since the early part of 1920. A native of Iowa, reared in a mining town, and with practical experience as a miner himself, he early became something more than a worker. His qualities as an organizer soon made him prominent, first in the American Federation of Labor, and later in the United Mine Labor, and later in the United Mine Workers. In 1917 he was elected vice-president of the United Mine Workers and some two years later succeeded to the presidency. Mr. Lewis served as a member of the Coal Production Com-mittee of the National Council of Defense and during the period of the with Germany he co-operated with United States Fuel Administration to maintain the maximum production of
